

Effective as of December 1, 2008, Thomas Nides, the Company's Chief Administrative Officer and Secretary, determined that he would no longer accept any reimbursements for taxes related to income imputed to him for his commuting and other personal expenses related to travel between his home in Washington, D.C. and the Company's offices in New York.