COUNTERPOINT GLOBAL | COMMENTARY | MARCH 31, 2021

Performance Review

Counterpoint Global seeks high quality companies, which we define primarily as those with sustainable competitive advantages. We manage concentrated portfolios that are highly differentiated from the benchmark, with securities weighted on our assessment of the quality of the company and our conviction. The value added or detracted in any period of time will typically result from stock selection, given our philosophy and process. For the quarter, the Advantage Portfolio returned -2.68% while the Russell 1000 Growth Index returned 0.94% and the Lipper Large Cap Growth Index returned 1.57%.

The long term investment horizon and conviction weighted investment approach embraced by the team can result in periods of performance deviation from the benchmark and peers. The portfolio underperformed the benchmark this quarter due to unfavorable stock selection, which more than offset the overall positive impact of sector allocations.

Large cap growth equities, as measured by the Russell 1000 Growth Index, advanced slightly over the quarter. Energy posted the largest gains in the Russell 1000 Growth index, while Consumer Discretionary, Consumer Staples, and Information Technology each posted small declines and were the relative laggards. Against this backdrop, the investment team continued to focus on stock selection and the long-term outlook for companies owned in the portfolio.

Information Technology was the top detractor in the portfolio this quarter, due to mixed stock selection. Several of the portfolio's positions in the sector were adversely impacted by a broad sell off in higher growth IT Services and Software companies that had performed well over the past year. This includes the portfolio's holdings in Coupa Software, Snowflake, and Okta, all of which underperformed despite solid fundamentals. Coupa Software, which offers cloud based enterprise software to help companies optimize spending, was the second greatest detractor across the portfolio. Its shares underperformed despite solid results characterized by revenue and profit growth that beat Street estimates. Coupa's recent acquisition of LLamasoft may pressure near-term margins as the company transitions this business to a subscription based business model; this also weighed on investor sentiment to an extent. Cloud data platform Snowflake was the third greatest detractor in the portfolio. Snowflake underperformed despite fundamentals that remained very strong, as the company reported accelerating revenue growth that surpassed expectations and management provided a healthy financial outlook. Okta, a leading independent provider of identity access management solutions for enterprises, was also a meaningful detractor in the portfolio. Okta's results beat Street estimates, however the company's outlook was muted due to expected reinvestment in growth initiatives which may lower near-term profitability. In addition, Okta announced its acquisition of competitor Auth0 in an all stock deal; the acquisition eliminates a fast growing competitor in the customer identity market while also providing Okta an opportunity to cultivate deeper relationships with the software developer community. Investor concerns about the acquisition likely weighed on Okta shares as well to an extent. Within the sector, the weakness in these holdings was partly offset by strength in Square, which was among the top contributors in the portfolio. Square provides payment, point of sale, capital, and business management solutions to facilitate commerce between businesses and consumers. Its shares continued to advance on solid results, characterized by increasing levels of user engagement on its Cash App mobile payment services platform, as well as improving payment volume growth in its seller ecosystem.

Communication Services also impeded the portfolio's relative performance, as mixed stock selection more than offset the favorable impact of a sector overweight position. Audio streaming services provider Spotify was the top detractor in the sector and the greatest detractor across the portfolio. We attribute the underperformance to some mean reversion following a period of outperformance over previous quarters, as well as somewhat mixed results. The company reported strong subscriber growth, continued recovery in advertising revenue, and solid engagement trends across both its music and podcast offerings; however, management provided guidance on subscriber growth and profitability that fell short of high market expectations. Within the sector, the weakness in Spotify was partly offset by strength in global communications platform Twitter and internet media services provider Interactive Corporation. Twitter was the top contributor in the portfolio. Its shares advanced on healthy financial results, characterized by accelerating advertising revenue growth, as well as an upbeat investor day presentation that highlighted initiatives the company has underway to increase the pace of product development, deepen user engagement, grow its user base, and improve monetization in newer channels. Interactive Corporation outperformed due to solid fundamentals across its major business lines; the company also confirmed its timeline to spin off its video hosting, sharing, and services platform Vimeo this year.

Stock selection in Consumer Discretionary, Health Care, and Industrials also detracted. Intuitive Surgical, a leader in surgical robotics, was a leading detractor among these areas and the fourth greatest across the portfolio. Growth in surgical procedures has slowed during the pandemic, which adversely impacted the company's results; management also did not provide financial guidance for the year, which weighed on share performance.

Conversely, Energy was the top contributor in the portfolio this quarter, due to strong stock selection as well as an average sector overweight position. Texas Pacific Land Corporation was the third greatest contributor across the portfolio. Its shares advanced on improving fundamentals, supported by a recovery in oil prices over the second half of 2020. During the quarter, the company also completed its conversion from a trust structure to a corporation.

Stock selection and an average sector overweight in Materials also aided relative performance, to a lesser extent. Aggregates producer Martin Marietta was the top contributor in the sector and the fifth greatest in the portfolio. Volume and pricing trends for aggregates have been favorable, leading to strong fundamentals for the company. In addition, investor optimism around the U.S. government's plans to increase federal funding for various infrastructure and transportation projects, which could generate incremental demand for aggregates, also buoyed Martin Marietta's shares over the period.

Lastly, Consumer Staples, Financials, Real Estate, and Utilities each had a negligible impact on the portfolio's relative performance this quarter.

The gross expense ratio is 0.93% for Class I shares and the net expense ratio is 0.85%. Where the net expense ratio is lower than the gross expense ratio, certain fees have been waived and/or reimbursed. These waivers and/or reimbursements will continue for at least one year from the date of the applicable fund's current prospectus (unless otherwise noted in the applicable prospectus) or until such time as the fund's Board of Directors acts to discontinue all or a portion of such waivers and/or reimbursements. Absent such waivers and/or reimbursements, returns would have been lower. Expenses are based on the fund's current prospectus. The minimum initial investment is $5,000,000.

The Russell 1000® Growth Index measures the performance of those Russell 1000 companies with higher price-to-book ratios and higher forecasted growth values. The index does not include any expenses, fees or sales charges, which would lower performance. The index is unmanaged and should not be considered an investment. It is not possible to invest directly in an index.

Risk considerations There is no assurance that a mutual fund will achieve its investment objective. Funds are subject to market risk, which is the possibility that the market values of securities owned by the portfolio will decline and that the value of portfolio shares may therefore be less than what you paid for them. Market values can change daily due to economic and other events (e.g. natural disasters, health crises, terrorism, conflicts and social unrest) that affect markets, countries, companies or governments. It is difficult to predict the timing, duration, and potential adverse effects (e.g. portfolio liquidity) of events. Accordingly, you can lose money investing in this portfolio. Please be aware that this portfolio may be subject to certain additional risks. In general, equities securities' values also fluctuate in response to activities specific to a company. Investments in foreign markets entail special risks such as currency, political, economic, market and liquidity risks. The risks of investing in emerging market countries are greater than risks associated with investments in foreign developed countries. Privately placed and restricted securities may be subject to resale restrictions as well as a lack of publicly available information, which will increase their illiquidity and could adversely affect the ability to value and sell them (liquidity risk). Derivative instruments may disproportionately increase losses and have a significant impact on performance. They also may be subject to counterparty, liquidity, valuation, correlation and market risks. To the extent that the Fund invests in a limited number of issuers (focused investing), the Fund will be more susceptible to negative events affecting those issuers and a decline in the value of a particular instrument may cause the Fund's overall value to decline to a greater degree than if the Fund were invested more widely.
